Chapter 1 by Kaylyn

As my bare feet pound the on the damp forest floor, I frantically searched for an exit but in the little moon light that managed to pierce through the dense canopy It was nearly impossible to distinguish anything. I could hear the screaming footsteps of my relentless pursuers, as I pushed forward through the thick brush. I nearly cried when I finally stumbled out of the forest and saw my salvation. To the best of my ability I ran, towards the curving road.

I looked behind me to see one of my enraged pursuer's chasing me. He was to close for my comfort, and I knew I would never make it to the road in time. I drastically changed my directory and started racing towards the pursuer. Since I had caught the masked pursuer off guard, I was able to knock him to the ground, but my small victory was short lived when my pursuer knocked me off the top of him and pinned me.

I struggled to break free from his iron grip, but my efforts were of no use. I heard the footsteps of my other pursuers as they came to a stop near where I lay, and silently stood, awaiting further instructions.

at me. He was dressed in a tight long sleeved midnight black shirt and equally dark pants. I couldn't see the other pursuers but I assumed they were similarly dressed.

Soon the footsteps returned, and the other pursuer handed something to the man on top of me. He moved the idem closer to me, and when the sliver of moonlight landed on it, my panicked struggle returned. He brought the syringe closer to me, while someone else took my arms and held them down. My efforts to escape them were futile, as he injected this "serum" into my arm and the darkness claimed me.
